THE EVENING CRITIC. ESTABLISHED AUGUST, 1808.

AMUSEMENTS.

Queen Victoria and "The Colonel."

London theatrical society is excited and delighted that the Prince of Wales has persuaded the Queen to see a play. He had his coachhouse at Abergeldie converted into a theatre, and the Queen drove thither from Baimoral. The company playing at Edinburgh was brought over to act "The Colonel," the Queen having been induced to leave her retirement in order to see the gental American here and the satire on astheticism. She arrived at Abergeldie at B o'clock, when she was met and accompanied to the theatre by a distinguished party. The scene inside the extemporized theatre was remarkably picturesque. The Queen's attendants and gillies carried torches, while an enormous bonfire opposite the entrance lighted up the surrounding hills. The last time that the Queen attended a theatrical performance was in 1859, at the Adelphi Theatre, in London, in company with the Prince Consort.—London Post.

"The Colonel" will be produced for the first time in Washington at Ford's Christmas matinee, Monday, December 26.

After an absence of six years the famous Vokes family will open here at the National Theatre next week. Their popularity is on the increase. The New York Herula has the following in regard to their engagement at that metropolis: "The line of ticket purchasers at the Union Square last evening stretched across the sidewalk, the soul of the speculator waxed joyous within him, the late comer guashed his teeth in despair, and all on account of the Vokes family. The house was packed soon after the curtain went up, and there was but one internission to the laughter in nearly three full hours. The old-time favorites were as bright and funny as ever, as well as a little smarter, if possible, and Miss Bessle Sanson was a most acceptable addition in the way of laughter, sprightliness, and something that looked like fiesh and blood, but bounced about like India-rubber. The longer of the two plays is about the first of the kind and also the worst; but any supid thing—even a day's record of the senate squabble—would be laughable if put on the stage by the Vokes family."

With music and with light,
With trumpets and with drums—
Just as beseems a sev'reign's prideBehold King Christmas comes! And song is throbbing round, And torches blaze anear— Just as beseems a hero's state— Moves on the Christmas cheer!

Ho! welcome him with shouts, With minstrel's lusty strain; Ha! ha! ho! ho! who would not Old Christmas come again?

With lips like cloven rose, With eyes star-glittering, With heart as vicorous as the frame, Youth greets the Christmas King!

With crown of snowy hair, And brow, time-furrow'd deep, Old Age plucks up his qualling heart And rouses from his sleep.

The wife's sweet womanhood, The maiden's loveliness, The children's bounding merriment All round the graybeard press,

As with music and with light, With trumpets and with drums, Just as beseems a sov'reign's pride King Christmas gaily comes!

We know his train of old, We know each laughing face; We joy to think each well-lov'd sprite Will fill his wonted place.

The wassail and the dance, Swift-footed Columbine-The magic wand of Harlequin, The purple light of wine.

The Fairy and the Gnome, All fresh from Elitu land, And Saxon hospitality, With largess in his hand—

They trip it merrily
To the music of the drums;
And we know from all this festal pomp
King Christmas gally comes!

Jokes, quips, and cranks and jests, Love-vows and stolen kiss, Rare dreams of tender souls, And youth's screnest bliss,

The log upon the hearth, and The holly on the wall, And the mistletoe where best Its hallow'd shade may fall,

Oh: life has many cares, And keenest woes, I ween; But still for e'en the saddest soul Joy-pauses intervene.

And so, we'll bloss the time
When with trumpets and with drums
Just as beseems a sov'reign's pride—
King christmas gaily comes.

The Greatest Printing-office in the World.

To the Editor of the Ecening Critic:
This Government is emphatically "of the people, for the people, and by the people." It is sustained by taxation, which reaches all the people, irrespective of caste or condition. The humblest are forced by circumstances to contribute to the national support, either by direct or indirect taxation. In view of this abstract fact, the benefits of government, under a wise system of reciprocity, should be shared by the children of misfortune as well as by the more favored. This line of thought is prompted by an experience and observation is prompted by an experience and observation which teaches that the welfare of the poorer and weaker classes of the American people are too often forgotten and neglected by the dispensers of patronage and the benefits inci-dent upon public service. I have in my mind a case in point. The Government Printingoffice is among the great governmental indus-tries of this nation, and should be so operated and managed as to secure the greatest amount of benefit to the largest number of people who are doomed by misfortune to secure a liveli-hood by honest toll. Its location is at the Na-tional Capital. It employs from 1,500 to 2,000 tional Capital. It employs from 1,500 to 2,000 males and females. The artisans, comprising the printers and bookbinders employed, are, of course, gathered from the various States of the Union, as the city of Washington has no resource equal to such a demand. This is as it should be, But the printing and binding service calls for other aids that Washington has largely supplied heratofore. I refer to the folders, sewing women, press and ruling machine feeders and laborers, which constitute a full half of the employes of the establishment.

After an absence of six years the famous vokes family will open here at the National Theatre next week. Their popularity is on the increase. The New York Heruld has the following in regard to their popularity is on the increase. The New York Heruld has the following in regard to their engagement at that the increase. As Incident of Christmas Life.

As a Chitto reporter was winding his way through the streets last inght, he spied a young man at the corner of Ninth street and Pennsylvania avenue holding on to a lampost. Every once in a while the young man was heard to cry out very mysteriously. The reporter went up to the aforesaid young man, who occasionally occupies a deak in the Teasury Department, and asked him what was the matter. "I have paid my fare on this car and I am poing to ride in tiff I have to stay here all night." "But," suggested The Christmas. "Hic, I don't care. I put my fare in this box here, and I am going to either ride on this ear or stay, hic, all night." "But you will freeze if you stand here." "Yea, and if let go! will fall in that mud. The Christmas they oung man had mistaken the lamp-past for a street-car and had put his ticket in the letter-box, concluded to let him hold on to the post.

The Return of Christmas.

With music and with light,
With trumpets and with drams and the poor poorer, and is not consistent with the genius of "a government of the people, for the people, and by the people."

Not only was machinery, unprofitable in its adaptation here, introduced into the Government Printing-office to invite the wolf to the door of the operatives, but the new-fledged policy of oft-repeated furloughs, without any legitimate cause therefor, has seriously affected the business of the city, inasmuch as it has reduced the wolame of the employes and reduced the volume of trade in the necessaries of life which steady employment and its rewards aids to advance and prosper. In view of these facts and circumstances, it is an unavoidable conclusion that the present management of the Government Printing-office does not consist with the well-being of the working-classes, or with the general welfare and prosperity of this city. It should be reformed, and that speedily.

"Are you going to the ball this evening?"
"No, I have another engagement. I am going with a friend to inspect the splendid stock of clothing advertised in THE CHITIC by B. M. Bridget, 439 Seventh street northwest."
